About twenty-five of the friends of Miss Stewart of Murray street gathered at her home last evening to remind her of her twentieth birthday. Walter Bartlett entertained the company with selections on the phonograph. William Dunham, in behalf of the company, presented the hostess a handsome bracelet, for which she feelingly responded. The evening was spent in playing games, after which a dainty collation was served by the Misses Stewart and Black. The party broke up at an early hour this morning, after wishing Miss Stewart many happy returns of the day.
Two young bachelors (at least their lady friends say they are bachelors) who reside on an avenue in the eastern part of the city met with an experience a few nights since which is said to have effectively stopped the growth of one's hair and the other was so frightened that he appears to be losing flesh through worry of a possible repetition of the happening. The whole thing was probably all imaginary but none the less real at the time. These two men had sought their repose at a reasonable hour when one of them had his suspicions aroused by sounds which he thought he heard outside the door. He called the other, and together they started to investigate. Visions of midnight marauders and burglars flashed through the minds of the men, but they went to the door with the intention of "doing" the prowler or being "done" themselves. One waited at the door and the other went to the electric light switch. Upon a given signal the lights were turned on and the door thrown open, whereupon they jumped to grapple with the disturber of their slumber. If they grappled at all they grappled with the air, for not even a stray cat could be found outside the door, and they returned to their beds to attempt to regain their shattered nerves.

About twenty-five of the friends of Miss Stewart of Murray street gathered at her home last evening to remind her of her twentieth birthday. Walter Bartlett entertained the company with selections on the phonograph. William Dunham, in behalf of the company, presented the hostess a handsome bracelet, for which she feelingly responded. The evening was spent in playing games, after which a dainty collation was served by the Misses Stewart and Black. The party broke up at an early hour this morning, after wishing Miss Stewart many happy returns of the day.
Two young bachelors (at least their lady friends say they are bachelors) who reside on an avenue in the eastern part of the city met with an experience a few nights since which is said to have effectively stopped the growth of one's hair and the other was so frightened that he appears to be losing flesh through worry of a possible repetition of the happening. The whole thing was probably all imaginary but none the less real at the time. These two men had sought their repose at a reasonable hour when one of them had his suspicions aroused by sounds which he thought he heard outside the door. He called the other, and together they started to investigate. Visions of midnight marauders and burglars flashed through the minds of the men, but they went to the door with the intention of "doing" the prowler or being "done" themselves. One waited at the door and the other went to the electric light switch. Upon a given signal the lights were turned on and the door thrown open, whereupon they jumped to grapple with the disturber of their slumber. If they grappled at all they grappled with the air, for not even a stray cat could be found outside the door, and they returned to their beds to attempt to regain their shattered nerves.

Annual Encampment at Waterbury.
The annual meeting of district No. 5, Patriarchal Odd Fellowship, will be held with Alhambra encampment at Waterbury Thursday evening of this week. The opening of the encampment will be at five o'clock, followed by the address of welcome by W. B. Clark of Waterbury and response by E. R. Clark of Montpelier. The patriarchal degree will be exemplified by Excelsior encampment of Randolph. At 8:30 there will be a banquet and in the evening the golden rule degree will be worked by Thomas Willey encampment of Montpelier. The royal purple degree by Minnehaha encampment of Barre. This will be concluded with the nomination of the D. D. G. P. for 1909-10.
